Increase empathy by learning about each other’s heritage, backgrounds and experiences.

Moving Lives Minnesota: Stories of Origin & Immigration (MLMN) explores the histories of the many communities who have moved through and to Minnesota. The two-year statewide initiative included multiple projects designed to engage and tailored for local audiences throughout Minnesota.

A trunk that made the journey with immigrants from Oslo, Norway, to Ellis Island in New York, and finally to Faribault, Minnesota.

The six stations of the Minnesota Public Television Association (MPTA) coordinated statewide production of content and experiences to engage communities to deepen understanding and build empathy.

- Original digital and television productions and acquired content
- Statewide broadcasting of curated programming
- Dear Minnesota digital letter writing project
- New Story Collection Blog with commissioned local writers
- Community-led media making
- Virtual and in-person story-sharing events
- Educational resources
- Social Engagement Platforms (Facebook, Instagram)
This report reflects the collective work of the MPTA and its impact for the second year of the initiative. Please see the Moving Lives Minnesota: Stories of Origin and Immigration report for July 1, 2019 – June 30, 2020 for information about year one.

Because of the pandemic and the events that transpired after the killing of George Floyd, connecting to our communities was fraught with challenges. Through the perseverance of our public media teams across the state, and the generosity and trust of our partners and individuals who believed in the mission of Moving Lives Minnesota, the initiative made a difference to those it reached.

Communities with roots from all over the world are represented in the work created by the MPTA. And most significantly, the initiative is grounded in the acknowledgement that Indigenous peoples were the original inhabitants of this continent and region.

Strengthen connections between communities throughout Minnesota

In the second year of the initiative, the MPTA produced more than 13 hours of content, including broadcast and digital short videos, documentaries and promotional clips.

In addition to broadcasting programs in the regions where they were produced, the Minnesota Channel featured a weekly programming block in spring of 2021. New and archival programs from around the state featuring stories of origin and immigration were broadcast and promoted as part of the Moving Lives Minnesota initiative. Public television stations across the country offered programs from this initiative to their viewers, resulting in even greater reach of our Minnesota stories. Please see the MPTA Impact report for more information about number of hours broadcast.

The MPTA hosted and participated in one dozen virtual and in-person events and engaging, interactive workshops.

Hundreds of stories were shared through research and content production. An additional one hundred digital stories were shared through the Story Collection Blog and the original Dear Minnesota letter-writing and story-sharing statewide project.

Social media platforms Facebook and Instagram were ideal for sharing historical facts, MPTA-produced and user-generated content, and news about the statewide initiative.
Impact Story: Critical history of Hispanic migrant farmers in the Red River Valley is featured in a documentary

Starting in the 1930s and continuing for decades, farmers in the Red River Valley of North Dakota and Minnesota depended on Hispanic field workers—laborers from Texas and Mexico who arrived to help with hoeing beet fields, tending crops, and bringing in the harvest.

These families’ migration stories are as compelling as those of the families that migrated centuries earlier. They took extensive risks and experienced culture clashes, climate shock, and language barriers.

Now, one and two generations later, these migrant workers have assimilated and settled in the region. Their children and grandchildren are working as professionals. They have contributed their own cultural stamp to the region’s art, cuisine, diversity, and economy.

Prairie Public produced a documentary to examine the amazing journey of the Red River Valley’s Hispanic community.

One viewer wrote, “Thank you for sharing your stories. It still continues that we don’t appreciate enough the hands and people who grow and produce our food. Hopefully this can help us learn, appreciate, and change.”

Prairie Public hosted a virtual premiere and conversation moderated by documentary producer Matt Olien, and featured participants from the documentary; Martha Castanon, Ken Mendez and Victoria Ramirez. Nearly 300 participants signed into the virtual event.

Impact Story: Documentary production creates bond with Indigenous communities

The Horse Relative - Distribution and Event 2021

The making and distribution of The Horse Relative has had a profound impact on the partnering Lakota and Dakota communities. Producer James Star Comes Out has been able to see his profile raised as a visiting teacher and artist around the country. Hundreds of art teachers across the US have shared and discussed the film with their students via PBS LearningMedia. There is renewed interest in equine therapy and beadwork in tribal communities throughout Minnesota and the Dakotas that is, in part, inspired by this film.

Nearly 200 PBS stations around the country agreed to broadcast the documentary through a three-year distribution agreement with American Public Television (APT). Officials at APT and PBS LearningMedia say that programmers and educators are in need of content made with and by Native Americans to assist with changing the narrative, as called for in Reclaiming Native Truth, the recent report funded by the Kellogg Foundation.

The Horse Relative is a story of hope and renewed pride for native communities. In a media landscape where many representations of native communities focus on heartbreaking drama or the effects of poverty, drug abuse or other symptoms of generational trauma, this is a story that ultimately focuses on the survival and renewal of an important and beautiful tradition that was nearly lost.

A special online screening and discussion event was held Thursday October 22, 2020 with the creators of the film and nearly one hundred participants including members of Indigenous communities.

Pioneer PBS worked with Art Educator Jamie Steffl at Redwood Falls School District #2897 and Jeremy Holien, Visual and Media Arts Education Specialist of the Perpich Center for Arts, to develop a series of three lesson plans and a PowerPoint presentation to accompany the Horse Relative video which has been uploaded to the PBS LearningMedia site for classroom use.

Impact Story: Responding to viewers asking for more immigrant stories

Local people speak of their experiences as an immigrant, business owner, and connecting to their communities, through content featured in Lakeland PBS’ series Common Ground.

The work is a result of addressing local community needs, gathered from viewer feedback. In May 2021, the Lakeland PBS “Program Preference Poll” was sent to members and asked, “which important stories or narratives are not being told in your community?”

Respondents wrote:

"Welcoming newcomers who are not Minnesota stereotypes (learning about Hispanics in nearby communities, Somalis or people of Islam who are becoming or are US citizens or new American/Minnesotans)."

"Local indigenous and people of color and their successes and challenges."

"How racist our community and surrounding areas are."

"Immigrant stories – even 2 or 3 generations removed. Immigrants have always impacted our country - we need to be reminded to celebrate."

"More positive stories about Native communities and how they are engaging with/contributing to local arts and music. Stories about immigrants or people of color who live and work in northern MN."

"I have never lived in a community with such a lack of diversity. We tend to tell stories of the Native American culture, the African American culture, the Asian cultures - I rarely hear the story of the interactions, communication differences, living as a blended community."

KSMQ developed and distributed a body of content featuring the critical work of community organizations whose mission is to help immigrants integrate into their new homes and preserve their cultural identities. Twenty-three mini-documentaries were either created or curated to give voice to these organizations and communities.

Community Organizations featured include the Intercultural Mutual Assistance Association (IMAA), Family Promise, Riverside Central Elementary, and Spark.

"I enjoy real people, more raw footage, and watching something local that I would otherwise not have seen. These clips fit that bill!"

Although not technically an immigrant, Javier did experience a tremendous shift in culture and surroundings while leaving his family behind. Javier moved again from Rochester, New York, halfway across the country to Rochester, Minnesota where he owns his own barbershop.

Mangesh Mane and Hema Sai Kishore
Broadcast and Digital Segment, Premiered February 2021

After moving to the United States from India, Mangesh Mane met his wife, Hema Sai Kishore, in Texas. Eventually, the couple moved to Minnesota. After living in Rochester for a few years, they decided to open a childcare center called Eureka Kids. The center prepares children for a lifetime of learning and strives to help them become global citizens like Mangesh and Hema.
Impact Story: Short films offer distinct perspectives on immigration and origin stories and converge, instilling empathy and understanding

In This Place
One hour documentary featuring four mini-documentaries: We Come From The Stars, Supper Club, Unweaving, New Horizons
Premiered March 2021

In This Place features four mini documentaries, told by four independent filmmakers, exploring where we come from and how our ancestors’ pasts have impacted us individually, and as a society, today. From Native American origin stories, to the juxtaposition of 19th and 20th century immigrants, to a journey back to a family’s roots, to a first generation immigrant and her family, this collection of short documentaries tell the stories that represent the fabric of who we are in Minnesota, and the United States. Each 15-minute documentary explores culture in a unique way, reflecting each featured individual journey or story, as well as the diverse voices of the filmmakers themselves.

This project gave WDSE the opportunity to commission diverse Minnesota filmmakers to tell authentic stories from their communities.

Passing of immigrant traditions and the evolution of identity are explored in WDSE • WRPT’s mini-documentary, Supper Club

Finnish artist Tia Salmela Keobounpheng featured in the film Unwoven, commissioned for production by WDSE • WRPT

Featured with her social robots is Arshia Khan, Professor and Director of Graduate Studies at Swenson College of Science and Engineering at the University of Minnesota, Duluth

More than 100 comments were shared on screen at the conclusion of the event, including:

"This was a lovely presentation! All four stories were so well told. Congratulations to all involved!"

"Virtual events like ‘InThis Place’ help me SO much during the pandemic. Watching these videos is filling my heart with so much joy. I NEEDED THIS!"

"...beautiful. honest. resilient. so many threads. and i see such family resemblance in those photos!"

"Wonderful, Tia! This brings on a yearning for my mother. And I wonder how your grandmother (and my mother) would react to your presentation? I have a feeling it would have been freeing for her."

"Arshia is 100% American"

"Great presentation from a proud Muslim female American from India"

"Wonderful documentary. Thank you, thank you for helping us listen."

What a great collective and interwoven story and conversation, thank you!

"More this! Thank you so much everyone! Beautiful, inspiring, moving work. Thank you funders, more this!"
In addition, the screening at Fond du Lac Technical and Community College was initially a small on-campus event, but the community got so excited about it that inspired a three-day National Indigenous multimedia festival in partnership with the American Indian Higher Education Consortium, WDSE/WRPT, and Adobe, called Thunder in DIGIfest.

- Tribal College and Universities (TCUs) submitted 91 student entries and 71 faculty/staff entries in the four categories of Photography, Audio, Animation, and Film.

- Nine discussion panels that featured 19 different panelists discussing how multimedia production interacts with Indigenous issues.

- The degree of interest in this effort to encourage Indigenous digital storytelling was so substantial that a group of people have already formed a new planning committee to not only continue but expand the scope of THUNDER in DIGIfest. This new entity is called the Indigiverse Collective and is in the process of exploring ways to include Indigenous peoples from not just the AIHEC TCUs, but from schools and organizations all around the world to participate in similar festivals and perhaps receive training to improve their multimedia production skills.

From We come from the Stars, a film commissioned by WDSE • WRPT.

"The main catalyst for this festival was WDSE/WRPT Broadcast Content Manager Dawn Mikkelson. Her enthusiasm for moving this project forward and her consistent support during each step of the process provided the foundation for the festival to succeed. Dawn provided invaluable feedback in the drafting of the Applicant Release Form and arranged for WDSE/WRPT General Manager Patty Mester to record a welcome message for the Opening Ceremony."

The culmination of WDSE/WRPT’s support for THUNDER inDIGIfest 2021 was to organize staff involved with the production of the nationally syndicated program “Native Report” to serve on two panels: Reporting on Indigenous Issues and Jobs in Video Production.

Conference attendees included:

- 39 TCU Student Applicants
- 23 TCU Faculty/Staff
- 19 TCU Poets
- 269 Audience members
Impact Story: Documentary productions and outreach confront historical trauma and lead to healing conversations between Indigenous inhabitants and groups that have immigrated to Minnesota for centuries.

Coming to Mni Sota explores conflicts, contradictions and solidarity among the millions who have moved through, and to, Minnesota. For hundreds of years, the arrival of those from around the world has changed Minnesota’s identity and caused disruption for those already here. By examining our state’s narratives, communities reveal unique stories that lead to greater understanding.

Historians and educators including Anton Treuer, Ojibwe author and professor at Bemidji State University, and Mary Lethert Wingerd, author and associate professor of history at Saint Cloud State University, came together to discuss the beginnings of our painful past. This powerful documentary was central to providing historical context for the statewide initiative about our state’s immigration history.

Coming to Mni Sota broadcast on Twin Cities PBS’ TPT2 and TPT MN Channel and as part of the Minnesota Experience history documentary series. It was distributed nationally to public television stations by American Public Television (APT) and was broadcast more than 60 times by 40 stations in 9 states across the country. Coming to Mni Sota was recognized as the winner of the 2021 Emmy® Award for Outstanding Cultural Documentary.

From a viewer in California

"...I have just watched the documentary about immigration to the great state of Minnesota titled Coming to Mni Sota! Outstanding program. I now live in San Jose, California but was born and raised in Minnesota. My family has several generations of Minnesotans on both sides. I have tried to explain to friends over the years about the interesting immigration situation in Minnesota. Everyone thinks it is still Swedes and Norwegians. Your program illustrated very well with complex situation in the state. And also it showed perhaps why there continues to be such prejudice among the "original settlers.". I also learned a lot about the native people whose land we just took and how much land was "Dakota territory."! I also thought the Ojibwe were the original native people of the State. The show was extremely well done. Thanks for expanding my mind and understanding of this complicated situation."

TPT licensed the one-hour documentary Stories I Didn’t Know by Minnesotans Rita Davern and filmmaker Melody Gilbert.

Rita Davern’s family members have always been proud to say that their ancestors once owned Pike Island, a beautiful piece of land in Minnesota. Once she learns how sacred this land was to the Dakota people who lived there for generations, Rita attempts to understand what happened to the land and the people, and why. She documented her journey in facing the complicated legacy of westward expansion in the United States – and her own family’s role in that history.

In addition to programming the acquisition, TPT co-hosted a virtual conversation in partnership with the Minnesota Humanities Center and the film’s co-directors Rita Davern and Melody Gilbert. Davern and Gilbert and subjects of the film discussed the documentary and ways to create understanding and empathy through story sharing. Participants will leave the discussion with resources on continuing the conversation.

One viewer wrote:

“We watched your beautiful, touching documentary last night on PBS. What a huge labor of love….wow Rita! Your heart-wrenching stories about your journey and your strong commitment to make things right will touch everyone’s heart and spark a desire to learn more! Hard, but beautiful stuff! Your production was incredible! Congratulations!”

TPT broadcast the Minnesota-made film on ten occasions.
Dear Minnesota was a user-generated content campaign that invited Minnesotans to share their own stories of origin and immigration by writing letters. Letters could come in many forms, whether that be handwritten, digital documents, videos, poems, or through any other medium that shares their story. Submission forms were translated into Hmong, Spanish and Somali. The letters were shared on digital platforms (Facebook, Instagram, website) where community members could read and share them.

The initiative drew inspiration from other digital storytelling initiatives such as StoryCorps, PostSecret, and Immigrant Stories at the Immigrant History Research Center. After researching other initiatives and developing submission guidelines and preparing publication platforms, the first round of letters was generated internally by MPTA station staff and advisors in early June before launching to the general public in mid-June 2020.

With the launch of the Moving Lives Minnesota Story Collection website in January of 2021, the blog became the primary platform for the sharing of Dear Minnesota letters.

Story sharing workshops were conducted throughout the year as a strategy to engage with different communities and offer context and support for the writing of letters. Three workshops were conducted with different audiences; an internal TPT workshop, a workshop for the MEA conference hosted by Education Minnesota, and a workshop with the Northern Lights Academy hosted by the Minnesota Historical Society. This workshop was also used as a foundation for other workshops conducted with Saint Catherine University and Normandale College for the American Portrait grant under Moving Lives Minnesota.

Additional activities such as the Story Exchange Placemats were developed in November 2020 as another method of generating conversation and sharing stories. The Story Exchange Placemats were later used as an engagement activity in partnership with ArtReach St. Croix and the NEA Big Read.

In addition to distributing submission forms, MPTA stations contributed content specific to Dear Minnesota. Pioneer PBS produced two digital shorts, inviting community members Cheniqua Johnson and Les Bergquist to respond to the prompt. WDSE/WRPT invited a letter from Tia Keobounpheng who was the subject of the Moving Lives Minnesota documentary “In this Place: Unweaving”. Letters were also received from residents living in all six PBS station viewing areas.
Dear Minnesota and its Impact

Dear Minnesota was successful in creating a collection of stories that represent a wide and diverse range of experiences. From first-generation to fourth-generation+, immigrant and Native perspectives, the initiative shared the trials and triumphs that many encountered on their way to and through Minnesota. The collection spans centuries of Minnesota history with roots all over the world.

Over the course of one-year, Dear Minnesota collected 44 letters across 34 cities and 4 states. Letters came in various forms: handwritten, digital documents, short videos, historical documents, family photographs, among many others. Participants shared feedback expressing gratitude for the opportunity to share their history and learn the diverse stories of other Minnesotans.

The participant demographics skewed older and more white, which aligns with the population and the Twin Cities PBS audience. Other parts of the initiative such as American Portrait intentionally targeted more racially diverse, younger, and more recent immigrants, but I would have liked to see more participation from these audiences with Dear Minnesota.

Dear Minnesota received press coverage when Annie Prafcke’s letter was featured in an article by the Grand Forks Herald in November of 2020. Dear Minnesota was also cited as a point of inspiration for the organization Thrive-Mahoning Valley as they coordinated their own storytelling initiative in Northeast Ohio during the summer of 2021.

“Instead of despising the aspects of myself that set me apart, I now see them as assets. I appreciate the multiplicity of my identity and take pride in my ability to understand people beyond stereotypes and appearances. I wear my midwestern roots on my immigrant, Asian body and will carry them with pride wherever I go.”

Excerpt of Dear Minnesota letter from Annie Prafcke.

Chinese adoptee Annie Prafcke as an infant and adult in her video letter to Dear Minnesota
"In 2017, I visited some of the areas and farms in Norway where my ancestors lived. This completed the circle - when I stood on the original farm where my great-grandfather had lived, I didn't feel the need to pick up any souvenirs – my own DNA had come from this place, I was my own souvenir."

Dear Minnesota/American Portrait and College of St. Catherine University (St. Kate's) Storytelling Workshops

February – May 2021

Dear Minnesota partnered with a digital storytelling class at St. Kate’s in St. Paul to help students create their own immigration stories, a project that aligned with the national PBS series, American Portrait. Twin Cities PBS received a grant from American Portrait that made it possible to supplement the Legacy-funded outreach and distribution work. Digital Engagement Specialist Kevin Yang created and led three story-telling workshops with 30 students.

Dafne Carmona-Rios, St. Kate’s student, shared:

"My digital story is a journey that I want to share with others. I want my life to have a purpose. Making a video of my journey has been a great project that has a lot of meaning. Like I said in my video, my journey is not who I am; it’s only a part of me. The journey of who I want to be and who I am right now is a long one. Every day I work hard to be better than the person I was yesterday. I hope that people who see my digital story understand that there is a story behind every individual. Immigrant stories are important because they give a sense of the raw reality that every immigrant goes through."

mptalegacymedia.org
The Story Collection Blog was another way the initiative gathered stories from the community. Across digital platforms, requests were made for story pitches and community writers and contributors were compensated for their contributions. Original stories generated from statewide communities, along with Dear Minnesota letters and other blog posts were published. 80 stories in all populated this newly designed website.
EDUCATION AND ADDITIONAL OUTREACH

Outreach and education efforts centered around each station’s rich, diverse content produced and curated, events, our statewide story gathering initiative, Dear Minnesota and our original Story Blog. Content includes user-generated content (personal stories, photos and articles), documentaries, segments for existing programs, digital shorts, promotional clips and social media posts.

Through collaborations with local colleges, education organizations, screening participants, and online participants, Moving Lives Minnesota shared our mission with groups from throughout the state of Minnesota using strategies and tools unique to the communities who engaged with them.

Early in the initiative, as the coronavirus pandemic escalated, and schools closed their doors, we created new ways to engage with educators. We developed Dear Minnesota and other tools to connect with students and educators directly and digitally. By the end of the initiative, stations of the MPTA were regularly hosting online events that included screenings, conversations and activities to promote Moving Lives Minnesota’s unique digital story gathering and storytelling tools and materials.

Every person in Minnesota has an origin story. They may have moved to Minnesota from another state or country, or their parents did, or grandparents, or ancestors. Their families or the families with whom they live take part in traditions that stem from this immigration story. These traditions may take the form of food, art, or holiday celebrations. In this activity, students will reflect on how their origin stories relate to the larger history of immigration in Minnesota. At the end of this activity, students will be able to reflect on traditions in their own lives, and how those traditions are part of a larger story of Minnesota origin and immigration.

Time: 3+ hours

Goal: Students will reflect on how their own history intersects with the history of Minnesota, then create their own multi-media project about their history.

Background information: People have been emigrating to Minnesota for hundreds of years. The Dakota people are native to the land that is now called Minnesota. Since then, there have several large-scale migrations:

- the Ojibwe people in the 1600’s,
- British and French fur traders in colonial times,
- Scandinavian people in the late 1800s and early 1900s,
- the Great Migration of African Americans moving from the southern United States in the 1930s, and refugee populations including Somali and Hmong peoples from the 1970s on.

Many students may see their histories in this timeline, but many more will not. The Minnesota Compass tracks immigration to Minnesota, by ethnic group, over time. You can find it here: www.mncompass.org/immigration/overview. Take a moment to review the immigration stories of less publicized groups. How might your students see themselves in these timelines?

Brainstorm: At the end of this section, students will have defined their culture and some cultural traditions, and decide which tradition(s) they will document for their project.

Discuss culture and cultural traditions. Many traditions throughout cultures focus on several main themes: food, holidays, and art among them. Ask students to do a quick brainstorm. What traditions can they think of? How have they participated in these traditions (attending a gathering, eating together, etc.)

Note: For many students, these traditions may stem from family or ancestry that is passed down through the generations. For other students, processing family history or past traumas (e.g. grandparents forced to go to Native boarding schools). If a student would not like to discuss their own family for any reason, they are welcome to pick a tradition with which they identify.
Ask students to choose their top 3 traditions. What people are present at these events? Where do they take place? What smells or sounds or tastes are there? How do these traditions make your students feel?

Finally, how do the traditions students chose relate to the larger history of Minnesota? Students do not have to be able to answer this question right now. They should begin to wonder: where did the tradition start? What else was going on at that time? Where could you learn more about how your history and the state’s history fit together?

Research: At this point, students have a list of traditions to research. They may interview family, friends, or community members, and review websites like MN Compass or local newspapers and history museums. Encourage students to be creative with their research methods. If students are researching traditions from historically marginalized cultures, they may not be able to find many sources in books or the media. Sources like Hmong story cloths, which tell history stories in embroidery, may be useful sources for researching traditions. At the end of this research, students should be able to discuss the primary and secondary sources they used, as well as discuss which sources they used and why.

Create: In this section, students will share their learning in a creative way. They may decide to write a paper, create a collage, video, a piece of art, or use technology, like Scratch, to code their story. Whichever medium they choose, their piece should answer the following questions:

- What is the tradition you are documenting?
- What does the tradition look like today?
- What is the origin of this tradition?
- How does this tradition relate to the larger history of Minnesota? (The answer may be: it doesn’t.)

Review and Reflect: Set up a gallery walk so that students can see each other’s work. Where do students see similarities between stories? What did they learn? What questions to they have?

If students choose, they may upload their project to the Dear Minnesota site at: movinglivesmn.org.

129D.18 GRANTS TO PUBLIC TELEVISION

Article 4 Sec. 7 Subd. 4. Reporting. A public station receiving funds appropriated under this section must report annually by January 15 to the commissioner, the Legislative Coordinating Commission, and the chairs and ranking minority members of the Senate and House of Representatives committees and divisions having jurisdiction over arts and cultural heritage policy and finance regarding how the previous year’s grant funds were expended.

The report must contain specific information for each program produced and broadcast, including the cost of production, the number of stations broadcasting the program, estimated viewership, the number of hours of legacy program content available for streaming on Web sites, and other related measures. If the programs produced include educational material, the public station must report on these efforts.

Overall, the first year of the biennium focused on working in our communities to develop trust, learn and launch the initiative. During the pandemic and particularly after the killing of George Floyd, it was critical that we reimagine how we engage our communities in ways that are meaningful to them. The impact report in year 2 of the biennium will demonstrate achieved outcomes and impact.

Initiative Work Plan

Living Lives Minnesota is a statewide history initiative designed to create engaging opportunities for Minnesotans of all ages to explore, understand, and preserve the history that has shaped our state for the past 400 years. This initiative will create a journey of understanding for our communities across the state. This will include partnering with our other MPTA stations that include a $276,450 pass through to the other 5 MPTA stations:

Assessment

- Track distribution and engagement with original and curated content
- Collect digital analytics and broadcast ratings
- Survey/Collect feedback from contributors, experts, educators, students, partners, audiences and communities
OUTPUTS

Approximately 100 produced and distributed digital outputs completed by all MPTA stations, including but not limited to:

Digital Story Wall
Easy-to-use, digital space where Minnesotans can share objects, and the stories behind them, that illuminate Minnesota migrations.

Original Documentaries
Exploration of the people who have sought and found home in Minnesota, and how they have shaped our state.

Artist Insights
Commission and curate art from multiple MN artists that inspires deeper understanding and sparks reflection about who we are.

Collections
Curated “collections” of objects and stories will illuminate and preserve Minnesota’s history and legacy for future generations.

OUTCOMES

EXPLORE
The rich multimedia collection of content will create new ways to access and explore Minnesota’s history; Special focus on empowering educators to use resources in the classroom (this evolved to meet the needs of educators that were able to commit to partnerships in the midst of the pandemic when schools moved to online learning. See education section for more information)

UNDERSTAND
Participation and engagement will deepen understanding about Minnesota’s history, and what unites us across our different stories

PRESERVE
Moving Lives Minnesota will invite Minnesotans to participate in creating a lasting archive of personal stories about Minnesota’s history with a statewide reach through partnerships and collaboration.
